

The Ugly Times

Issue 0: Volume 0

Sidebar

Wheaton College's untouchables to convert to Buddhism

Guy study shows communication with Wheaton girls 100% nonverbal

Wheaton Student Discovers That Being Transparent Works Too Well

Following the advice dispensed by the Broadcaster, a Wheaton student (known in this article only by his dastardly sins) decided to be transparent with a few of his closest friends. Upon doing so, he was immediately dumbfounded at how well the whole transparency thing worked. He didn't merely become transparent, he became invisible! He had to jab his friends with an elbow before they acknowledged his presence.

Former Male Student Held Godly View of Wheaton Females

"Yes, we Wheaton women really miss him. In his eyes we weren't just sex objects.. in fact, his eyes never wandered to our breasts or buttocks even when our garb suggested it. He really put forth an effort in engaging a woman's mind and spirit, regardless of her attractiveness." This male student was expelled immediately after an intercepted IM message revealed that he was a homosexual.

Eighth consecutive Guy Turned Down by a Girl Using the Excuse, "I'm not friends with you."

This week has seen a bumper crop of no's from girls. Perhaps it's senior (or freshmen) panic; perhaps it's the weather. Whatever the cause, the eighth guy to get turned down happened to be a 4.0 philosophy major well versed in everything. He reasoned that post-pubescent friendship between guys and girls was a bilateral aesthetic interaction and there had to be a latent effervescentness about a guy that would cajole a girl to him.